How would you describe your overall internship experience during your final year of faculty?

Deciding to apply for an internship at Accelsiors was the best choice I made during my studies. At first, I was worried about the responsibilities and time management that came with the job. However, once I started working with my manager and the team, those fears faded away. I felt comfortable and proud to have the opportunity to further my skills and learn about the business world, which unfortunately wasn't something my university taught me.

What were your main responsibilities during your internship, and how did they align with your expectations?

In the beginning, I was responsible for researching and reading scientific publications, identifying relevant facts, and writing summaries. I also prepared content for social media and the website on appropriate topics. Even though my position wasn't directly related to clinical trials, the satisfaction I gained from writing this content to educate the public about health exceeded my expectations.

How did the internship help you develop new skills, both professionally and personally?

I learned what it's like to work in a team and rely on others. I realized there's no need to be afraid when I want to ask questions, share my ideas and opinions, or suggest changes. After six months as an intern, I feel more confident in myself and my decisions. I've become a more responsible and open-minded person, ready to help others, but also willing to seek help from others when necessary.

How did you manage the demands of your internship while keeping up with your final-year studies?

Balancing my internship and the final year of my studies was challenging but manageable. I focused on prioritizing my tasks and created a detailed schedule to help me manage my time better. This way, I could stay on top of my schoolwork and internship duties without feeling too stressed.

What advice would you give to current students who are about to start their internship or who are looking for one?

I encourage students to be proactive and open-minded during their internships. Make the most of every chance to learn, connect with others, and ask questions. My biggest advice for students is to not be afraid. If you have an opportunity, grab it and don't let go. Every new challenge is a chance to grow and improve. College can't teach us everything, so try to step into the business world during your final year, and you'll see that every problem has a solution, every mistake is a new lesson, and every piece of feedback (positive or negative) will make you stronger.

If you could go back and change one thing about your internship experience, what would it be?

If I could change one thing, it would be my position. Not because I dislike this role, but because I want to learn new things and gain experience directly related to clinical trials. I'd love the chance to try myself in and contribute to different sectors.
